Investment commentary

Through much of February, equity markets were focused more on positive survey data than on the risks of Covid-19. But that changed towards the end of the month, as the effects of China's shutdown, the risks of a pandemic and the likely reactions to it had a more understandable effect on equity prices. Though too early to judge the precise economic impact of the disruption, it is undoubtedly going to lead to weaker growth. This saw the FTSE All-Share drop by 8.9%. The NSCI (XIC) declined by 9.5% and the Fund by 11.1%. Style and size factors mattered little over the month.

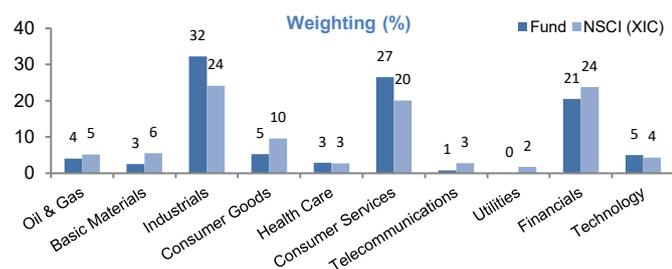

As the results season got underway, most companies have been reporting in line, but several warned about the future impact of the coronavirus on business. Consistent with this, the Fund's performance was hindered by stocks exposed to the global growth outlook: international consultancy firm RPS, specialist contractor Keller, mining royalties company Anglo Pacific and Premier Oil all performed poorly. Meanwhile, subprime lender Amigo was weak amidst the on-going strategic review and formal sale process. Not owning Daejan Holdings, a property company, detracted from the relative return following a cash offer to take the business private by its largest shareholder.

Among the winners, news publisher Reach stood out for its robust results and a strategy update that reported good progress with a number of digital initiatives. Elsewhere, PR company Huntsworth was a notable out-performer, but on no news.

Risk warnings

Capital may be at risk as the value of investments may go down as well as up and is not guaranteed; therefore investors may not get back the amount originally invested. Past performance is not a guide to future performance, nor a reliable indicator of future results or performance.

Investments in shares of smaller companies are generally considered to carry a higher degree of risk as the market for their shares may be less liquid than that for shares of larger companies, making shares of smaller companies more difficult to buy and sell.

The performance of shares of smaller companies may be more volatile than the shares of larger companies over short time periods; therefore investors should regard such investments as long term.

There can be no guarantee that the investment objective of the Fund will be achieved or provide the returns sought by the Fund.

An investment in the Fund is only suitable for investors who are capable of evaluating the merits and risks of such an investment and who have sufficient resources to be able to bear any losses which may arise from such an investment (which may be equal to the whole amount invested). Such an investment should be regarded as long term in nature and complementary to existing investments in a range of other financial assets and should not form a major part of an investment portfolio.

The dealing spread of the Fund, which represents the difference between the buying and selling prices, will have an impact on the realisable value of any investment made in the Fund, particularly in the short term. To mitigate the impact of capital erosion, investors should regard investments in the Fund as long term.
