Monthly investment commentary: January

The momentum reversal in asset prices was as swift as it was sharp in January. Stocks that performed poorly in 2022 have led the way up in 2023, so far. The markets' "risk-on" shift was prompted by indications that inflation has peaked. Comments emanating from the central banks went some way to support the hope for more modest interest rate rises and a less severe economic downturn.

UK stocks performed well, though the large caps, which proved so resilient in 2022, trailed small and mid-caps. The FTSE 100 rose by 4.3%, the FTSE 250 by 5.4% and the NSCI (XIC) by 6.1%. The Fund's performance was consistent with the theme of momentum reversal: having performed relatively well in 2022, its 5.4% gain in January was modestly behind that of the benchmark.

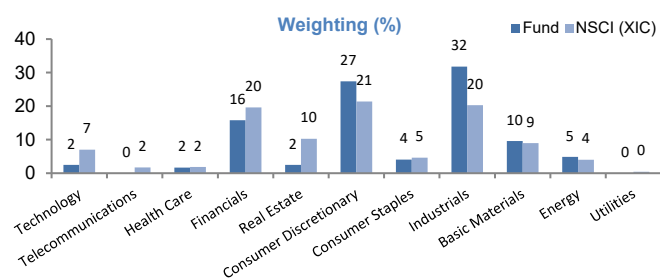

Turning to stocks, the broad momentum theme was also in evidence. Among the main detractors to the Fund's relative return were stocks that performed poorly enough in 2022 to enter the benchmark on 1 January. Following what was the index's largest ever rebalancing, non-holdings such as ASOS, Bridgepoint and Carnival bounced in January to the detriment of the Fund's relative performance. Meanwhile, among the holdings, Wincanton (logistics) gave underwhelming guidance for 2023 and Negean (oil & gas) reported weaker than expected production figures.

Relative winners for the Fund included holdings in Senior (aerospace & automotive engineering) and Card Factory (greetings card retail). Both issued trading updates, reporting that 2022 had ended in a positive fashion.

All data supplied by Aberforth, except NSCI (XIC) data (from Numis/Paul Marsh and Elroy Dimson – London Business School) and FTSE data (from FTSE International Limited).

Risk warnings

Capital may be at risk as the value of investments may go down as well as up and is not guaranteed; therefore investors may not get back the amount originally invested. Past performance is not a guide to future performance, nor a reliable indicator of future results or performance.

Investments in shares of smaller companies are generally considered to carry a higher degree of risk as the market for their shares may be less liquid than that for shares of larger companies, making shares of smaller companies more difficult to buy and sell.

The performance of shares of smaller companies may be more volatile than the shares of larger companies over short time periods; therefore investors should regard such investments as long term.

There can be no guarantee that the investment objective of the Fund will be achieved or provide the returns sought by the Fund.

An investment in the Fund is only suitable for investors who are capable of evaluating the merits and risks of such an investment and who have sufficient resources to be able to bear any losses which may arise from such an investment (which may be equal to the whole amount invested). Such an investment should be regarded as long term in nature and complementary to existing investments in a range of other financial assets and should not form a major part of an investment portfolio.

An investment trust is a public limited company, the shares of which are traded on the main market of the London Stock Exchange. Accordingly, the ability of shareholders to sell their shares will be dependent on the market price of the shares. The shares may trade at a discount or premium to their net asset value.

Investment trusts may borrow money in order to make further investments. This is known as gearing. The effect of gearing can enhance returns to shareholders in rising markets but will have the opposite effect on returns in falling markets.
